Brief description: -

Good morning to our worthy Principal and respected LECTURERS and all the students present here.

I am K S KAVITHA FROM OUR COLLEGE. Today I got an opportunity to deliver a speech on the election.

The process through which people can choose their representatives is called elections for example the process through which members of parliament are being chosen.

Once Abraham Lincoln said the words which are "of the people, by the people, for the people" which means people of a democratic country can choose their government by themselves without any pressure.

They are free to vote for any candidate according to their preferences in order to perform the required actions to make the government and to run the country.

Elections play a major role in democracy as they are important for the development of a democratic country like India or any other nation in which people have the right to choose their government. In India, after every five years elections are held.

The system of the first-past-the-post electoral system is used by the Lok Sabha and Vidhana Sabha. The candidates do promotions of their party and give a speech for the election campaign in the public. Then in each area, electors can cast their votes according to their choice, and the candidate who gets more votes will be announced as a winner.

There are merits and demerits of the elections. Elections give every party a chance to compete with each other equally. The candidate does work properly so that they want to be in everyone's eyes and win the elections.

Through elections, actual power remains in the hands of the people. If they can select any representative or party and allow them to form the government and that government does not work in favor of the progress of the country, then the same people have the power to throw the government from its position in the next election.

The demerits of the elections are that some parties clash with each other as they do not want to see another one reach that place. From this, some people also harm others and put pressure on the people to support their party so that they will be in power.

They also use improper ways to win the elections like giving bribes to people, giving alcohol bottles to each male person so that they will be on their side. For fair elections, the election commissioner has to have electoral rolls in the country and needs other members who can regularly verify and update the electoral rolls.

At the time of elections, the duty of the volunteer is to look after the elections so that they will be performed fairly and give people knowledge about the elections so that they come to know that it is so important to cast their vote to form the government.

It is their right or duty to choose the government at the same time. To conclude, I want to say that elections are the strong pillars of the country.

It keeps the democratic country to be developed and helps in keeping its true essence. It gives the right to people of the democratic country to choose their government according to their choice.

Thus, there is a requirement of proper awareness to be spread among the people so that they don't miss casting their precious vote because one vote can make or break the future of the country.
